Extract from a Bio Balance Health Doctor Research Paper:

Potential Financial Savings by using Targeted Nutritional Treatment of Mental Health

By Dr Richard Stuckey – Coolangatta Medical Practice
First doctor trained in Australia using Walsh Research Institute protocols

One Schizophrenia patient who at the time of consultation (2004) was in a floridly psychotic phase for 3 years prior to his appointment, and had spent an average of 30 days per year in hospital.

A decade later, he lives independently, exercises, shops, catches public transport, is in regular contact with his psychiatrist, takes both pharmaceutical and nutritional medicine, is not employed and has not been in hospital for a decade.

If his prior hospital admission rate had persisted he would have had 300 days in hospital over the 10 year period, and allowing $1,500 a day, this would have amounted to $450,000. A considerable saving to Medicare for only one patient.

In 2010 I (Dr Richard Stuckey) published a 12 month follow up on 567 consecutive patients who consulted him in 2004. 157 patients with diagnosis of either depression, Bipolar Disorder or Schizophrenia had accumulated only approximately 300 hospital admission days.

157 treated patients, 300 hospital days – 2 hospital days per patient.

We were unable to contact 26 patients who did not start this program – between them they had accumulated 650 hospital days in one year.

26 untreated patients, 650 hospital days, 25 hospital days per patient.

IF the treated group had not attended and had the same hospital rate as the non treated group, there would have been 3,635 extra hospital days and allowing $1,500 per day there was an estimated saving to Medicare of $5,435,500 by 1 doctor in 1 year.

These comments were part of a speech by Dr Richard Stuckey at the Bio-Balance Anniversary Dinner in April 2013.
