PATHOLOGY FOR MENTAL HEALTH

Presented by Brett Lambert, Chief Scientist, AAL

Join us as we take our latest lecture on an Australian tour. BBH has been pioneering the way for using pathology for mental health symptoms since 2004. We have continued to explore deeper into this critical science, and are ready to share our latest findings and insights.

In this session, we'll explore:

- An integrative approach to essential pathology and biochemistry, supported by references and research.
- The potential harm of poor pathology.
- The interplay between adrenal bursts, inflammation, oxidative stress, and pathophysiology.
- Peer-reviewed research confirming the clinical value of this approach for mental health symptoms.
- Correct testing protocol and interpretation for various health indicators.
- How pathology informs nutrient selection.
- The clinical integration of testing into your practice.

Moreover, we'll delve into thought-provoking questions: Can improved pathology minimise suicides, PTSD, and epigenetic changes? Can targeted treatments reverse epigenetics? Can this pathology provide other insights? Your input will be invaluable as we explore these topics.
